Household Living on Cream-Chickens Hatched in Hawk's Nest-Crowd at Weekly Whist.

A local milkman stated on Thursday that he was havink a difficult time in disposing of his milk since the milk strike at Providence. One evening lately he had twenty quarts on hand. Consequently he has been eating cream on everything and his wife mixed the biscuits for supper with cream instead of milk.

Cheated the Hawk.

Two local boys recently made an interesting experiment, the climax of which came a day or two ago. They substituted two hen's eggs in a hawk's nest for the hawk's eggs which they took out. They watched the nest carefully and one day found that the chickens had hatched and that the hawks had been bringing them nice frogs, etc., which of course they could not eat. The boys took the chickens and gave them to a motherly hen to look after.
